Currently I have been thinking a lot about the problems that are coming for my future since because I am an immigrant I will not be able to continue studying, yes I could continue studying but it is something where you have to pay a lot of money to be able to go to school, it is something that you do not You have the resources to assist. Other situations are that you cannot be working legally because you cannot or due to other circumstances that you need your social security or other cases.

Since now my circumstances are that when you graduate you need to look, you don't deactivate it for yourself, you have to look for new achievements to be able to advance and be another person, but the only obstacle is where people do not have the benefits or do not count on being legally in the country and that in fact Like other people.

What worries me until these days is that I will not be able to have my education, I must be able to grow, study like that, which is sad for my future because I am an immigrant who has resources and the benefits that are requested to be able to be in a job, the fear of being This also carries the worry and not being able to be a professional person, obtain a permanent job due to the circumstance or have a home.

The concept of the future is an unknown and unnerving topic that startles many. Oftentimes it takes me by surprise as well. I feel overwhelmed when thinking about the future, unsure of where I fit in or where I'm headed. Although that is still undetermined, it worries me that if I enter college, I will be one of the few Hispanic students in the school. At times it's difficult to be accepted because there are still people out there who have assumptions about people just because of their race. I find myself putting so much pressure on myself because I do not want to give them a reason to think the worst. It's one thing to be physically different, but once it becomes emotional, I feel disconnected from my peers. It's unfortunate to think about it this way, but there have been times in elementary school that I felt separated from my classmates. It's hard to meet everyone's expectations. When I was younger, I used to strive to fit in with my peers. However, I have come to realize that seeking approval from others is not something that defines my worth.

There are reasons that I felt different, the first being that my family situation was not like the other kids. Some worked a 9 to 5. Some kids mentioned that their parents stay at home, but since I was young my dad worked all day just for a few dollars. There were days when I would not even see him. He was perceived and judged so much as an immigrant coming into the US. Just because he was not from America he was treated poorly.

The issue of immigration workers takes a toll on me because although I have not personally lived through it. It saddens me to think about my dad working nonstop with no sleep. I often think about him when I struggle to do something and know that he made it through the worst conditions and that I could make it through my challenges too. Hispanics are often perceived a certain way because of some of the negative stuff on the news and immigrant problems. Maybe we do have similar family stories and situations, but that doesn't affect our character. Every one of us might have similar circumstances, but we have different morals which shape us as a person.
